Amy Ellen Schwartz, a renowned scholar in public policy and economics, is Director of the Institute for Education and Social Policy (IESP) and Professor of Public Policy, Education, and Economics at the Steinhardt School of Education and Wagner School of Public Service. Professor Schwartz’s research is primarily in applied econometrics, focusing on education policy and finance, and urban policy more generally. Her current research projects examine high school reform, the relationship between housing, schooling and neighborhoods, equity and efficiency in school spending, and the education of immigrant students. Her work has been published in the American Economic Review, Educational Evaluation and Policy Analysis, The Journal of Human Resources, The Journal of Public Economics, and Education Finance and Policy, among other academic journals. The author of several book chapters, she co-edited the 2005 Yearbook of the American Education Finance Association (AEFA), Measuring School Performance and Efficiency, and edited City Taxes, City Spending: Essays in Honor of Dick Netzer. She currently serves as the President of the American Education Finance Association, and on various boards including the editorial board for Education Finance and Policy and the Committee on the Status of Women in the Economics Profession (CSWEP).
